GLASS Ballon for important red wines

The eye is immediately captivated by the density of the liquid, a beautiful dark red, almost impenetrable. Who knows what it will reveal in its magical wine realm?

The nostrils can't resist; they sniff from a distance ripe red fruit, sweet spices, carob, and the Mediterranean scrubland. But as they continue to dive into the complexity of scents, they are interrupted by the sense of hearing, eager to have its say: "Can't you hear this polyphonic chorus of melodious notes rising from the glass? Enchanting..."

The taste, which has been silent until now, enjoys a sip that is a caress, enveloping it in its gentle, benevolent whisper at first, then expanding, taking it deeper, where the voice becomes more distinct, substantial, yet always refined and graceful, with an added touch of freshness. It doesn't lack power and assertiveness, yet the balance is like a tightrope walker, urging you for the next sip, while the sun, the sea, and the warmth of the South emerge in all their evocative beauty.

FRIENDS OF THE FEAST

The taste buds, enticed by the wine's passage, seek food: here are some suggestions. As an appetizer, wild boar pâté in a crust, or crostini with lard, pecorino cheese, rosemary, and honey. You could continue with pappardelle pasta with hare ragout or potato and provolone cheese tubetti; and then smoked pork ribs. A nice selection of cheeses, and there you have it, Susumaniello in abundance.

And while you hum the song "Red Red Wine" by UB40 in the background, enjoy reading De Gustibus. In Search of the Gastronomic Experience by Robert Appelbaum. We suggest finishing the last glass with a smile while watching the entertaining comedy, The Chef by Daniel Cohen.
